Jax Wright's world was turned upside down at the age of ten after a brazen attempt to avoid the lash of a father's belt turned into the most horrific thing he'd ever witnessed. Not only was Jax emotionally shattered by the tragic accident, but he was sentenced to eight years in a juvenile detention facility. Upon his release, the now eighteen-year-old Jax realizes his only option is to put the past behind him and make a new life for himself. As Jax begins his struggle with the fear that accompanies adjusting to life on the outside, he's suddenly faced with a far more daunting challenge, as there's someone who's been watching and waiting during his incarceration, her ire growing stronger daily, intent on making him remember the past by making his future as close to hell on earth as possible.

Jax's grim tormentor, known only as "Brenda," uses a highly unorthodox method to thrust him into a treacherous journey that has him darting back and forth across the country, with very little time to spare and the police and FBI hot on his trail, to save the ones he loves most, including his best friend and father figure, a corrections officer from Juvenile Hall, and thousands of other innocent strangers, from unimaginably horrific deaths. Brenda's twisted "game" will either send Jax to his early grave or end in his ultimate redemption and, he hopes, a reunion with his family, who left him heartbroken and alone during his greatest moment of crisis.
