For two centuries, Athens had the perfect conditions of economic growth: the democratic system, property rights, free markets and a free middle class. But why were they still in extreme poverty in that period? The watershed of world economic growth appeared about in the 19th century. Before the 19 centuries, most of the people's living state was ""poverty and shortage"". It was more common to die from murder than accidental death, kidnapping was a livelihood. Even, if British prime minister did not carry swords, daggers or pistol, he was never dare to rush into the streets. But after the 19 th century, most people's life has undergone earth-shaking changes.
