Ferre by Vogue Gianfranco Ferre

Ferré was often referred to as the Frank Lloyd Wright or the architect of Italian fashion, not just because he had received a degree in architecture in 1969, but because his design approach was so rooted in sculptural lines and artistic ideals. His womenswear collections were always presented in dramatic and theatrical fashion in his via Pontaccio headquarters, where a vast mirrored salon was transformed into a fashion arena for a parade of fashion "goddesses" who perfectly cleaved to the designer's ideal of modern warrior woman, tall, proud and strong.
