If Birds Gather Your Hair For Nesting: Poems (The National Poetry Series) Anna Journey

In this debut collection, Anna Journey invites the reader into her peculiar, noir universe nourished with sex and mortality. Her poems are haunted by demons, ghosts, and even the living who wander exotic landscapes that appear at once threatening and seductive. In these poems, her sly speaker renames a pink hibiscus on display at Lowe's, "Lucifer's Panties"; another character chants, "I'd fall devil / over heels over edge over oleander"; and one woman writes a letter to the underworld:

Dear black bayou, once, by a river

I bit a man's neck. His scent: the raw teak air husked inside stomachs of six

Russian nesting dolls?the ones in the attic I pulled apart and open. The ones I pulled apart and open like Styrofoam cups.
